◆ 九、閱讀測驗：12 分（每題 3 分）

Have you ever had this experience? When you go to the supermarket on weekends, you see people all over the place. Many families do their weekly shopping because they don't have much time during the week. Every cart is full, and that means it will take you a long time to get to the checkout.

For sure, paying is easy now. You can pay in cash, by card, or even with apps on your cellphone. But what if we can just leave the store with things in our hands and don't need to spend time waiting in line? Wouldn't that be wonderful? Well, Amazon, one of the top 10 businesses in the US, is trying to make every shopper's dream come true. In Amazon Go, you can get things in the store and just leave. You don't have to wait in line. Bills will be in your mailbox in a few days. It's a good way to save time in our busy lives.

The idea is still an experiment. But with the help of new technologies, many people believe it will become a common way for everyday shopping in the future.

◆ 九、閱讀測驗：12 分（每題 3 分）

When you take a trip abroad, you may face a problem of giving tips because tipping rules are different in every country.

People say that tipping culture comes from the UK. At first, tips were gifts from rich people to their servants. In the 18th century, some businessmen began to put a bowl on each table in their hotels. If customers put money in the bowl, they would get good and fast service.

In the 19th century, tipping was very important in people's lives in America. Then some rich Americans brought the tipping culture to some European countries. In the 21st century, though some Americans talk about the good or bad side of tipping, they still have the tipping culture. Also, many people make their living by getting tips in service industries in the US.

Today, tipping has become a must in some countries, but in some countries, you should never tip. In Japan, giving tips may make people feel annoyed. In France, the price of your meal includes tips. In Taiwan, we usually pay service fees in a restaurant. However, we know that the waiters or waitresses don't actually get the money. Isn't it strange?

Americans always have a BBQ in their backyards on the National Day, July 4th. BBQ has been an important part of American culture, and it began in the 15th century. In 1494, when Columbus's ships were in Cuba, the crew found a different way of cooking. People in Cuba put fish on a metal net and made a fire under it to cook fish. The crew called it "Barbacoa," and later it became "BBQ."

Then people brought BBQ to the US. Even George Washington, the Father of the US, held lots of BBQ parties at his house, and many people went to his parties. In the late 1930s, a car company began to sell coals. It encouraged people to drive to the country to have a picnic and a BBQ on holidays.

Many Americans enjoy living in their own big houses in the country. In the 19th century, lots of people moved to the US to start their new life, but they didn't have a backyard to

Many people used to watch movies in theaters. They believed that big screens and powerful sound were necessary, and that movies were made for theaters only. However, as the Internet has become common, people find it more comfortable to watch movies at home. So, there are more and more video streaming platforms now, such as Netflix, Apple TV+, and Disney+.

Of all the platforms, Netflix probably has the most movies. Though you can find some terrible movies on Netflix, some excellent movies are made by it. For example, Roma won three Oscars (奧斯卡金像獎) in 2019. Some filmmakers were not happy about this. They thought Netflix would make the theater business worse.

In fact, streaming platforms became even more popular because of COVID-19. First, most theaters were not open. Second, people couldn't go out, so these platforms became their best choices. Last, some movies were played by stars and thought to be blockbusters, but they could be watched only on these platforms. So people wanted to pay money for the streaming platforms. The habit of watching movies has been changed, hasn't it?

When you travel or live in the UK, you can hear people say “Lovely” to you in many places. You may be happy that they are talking about your good looks. However, “Lovely” usually means “Thank you” for English people.

Some people in the UK think it’s too formal to say “Thank you,” so they use other expressions to show “Thank you,” such as Cheers, Lovely, Cool, Great, and Ta. And Cheers is the most popular expression to show thanks of all.

At first, the English said “Cheers” when they toasted one another. In the 1970s, it had the meaning of “Thanks.” And Ta has been used since the 18th century. Children said “Ta” to show thanks. Now “Ta” is used by people of all ages. It’s interesting that Ta is a shortened expression. “I Thank You” became “Thank you,” “Thanks,” and “Ta” in the end.

A language really carries the culture of its speakers. That’s why the meaning of a word is not always what you learn from a dictionary. However, it’s still important to use formal expressions when you have an interview or write a report.

◆ 九、閱讀測驗 : 12 分 (每題 3 分)

English uses he or she to tell the gender. In Spanish (西班牙文) and French, words have two genders, masculine and feminine. There are even three genders in German (德文). In these countries, it's easy for parents to know if their children go out with boys or girls.

Some people find it difficult to tell the gender of words in languages. For example, "bridge" is masculine in Spanish, but it's feminine in German. Spanish people think a bridge is big and strong, but German people think a bridge is beautiful and thin.

There is another interesting fact. When French people "dub" an animation movie, they choose a voice actress to play the role of a fork, and a voice actor to play grapes. On the other hand, Spanish people choose a voice actor to play a fork, and a voice actress to play grapes. This is because the genders of forks and grapes in Spanish are different from those in French.

German, French, and Spanish people learn a word along with its gender when they are kids. They don't even think about why a word is masculine or feminine. But as you can see, the idea of gender in languages does matter in people's lives.

Many people couldn't believe their eyes when they found out Alina Morse, a teenage girl, was the founder of Zolli Candy. Guess what? She has not only about twenty-five thousand stores around the world but also an online shop to sell her sugar-free candy.

Alina is the leader of Zolli Candy, but she doesn't have to fight on her own. When she is busy, her father holds meetings, her mother plans things, and her younger sister makes videos for the company's YouTube channel. Her father even thinks working for her is one of the most fulfilling things.

Although the business takes Alina much time to deal with, she still studies as hard as other high school students. What's more, she never gives up another dream of hers — dancing. During the school year, she keeps a balance between the company, school work, and dance practice; during the vacation, she spends more time on the business. The company takes 35 to 40% of her time. After graduating from high school, she even plans to go to college to learn more about running her company.

Dear Diary,

After chatting with Ethan for a month, I finally decided to meet him face to face. We made a deal to meet at a coffee shop across from Forest Park. I was excited at first. However, I started to worry that he might be a liar and didn't look like his picture. Therefore, I arrived there 10 minutes late and tried to find him outside the coffee shop. Ethan said he would wear a blue jacket, but when I looked into the shop, there were two boys who were like that. One was ordering a lemon cake from the shopkeeper, but he looked much thinner than Ethan. The other was sitting below the stairs, but he didn't look my age. He looked much older. Just when I was thinking, someone tapped me on the shoulder. "You must be Carrie," a boy in a blue jacket said. "Sorry, I'm late. Let's go inside. It's my treat!" He looked just like his picture, and it was more fun to chat with him face to face. I had a wonderful afternoon.

◆ 九、閱讀測驗：12 分（每題 3 分）

Popcorn is often sold in movie theaters as a popular snack. It is delicious and easy to make. In fact, making popcorn doesn't cost much money, so movie theaters can make a huge profit from it. People often feel thirsty when eating popcorn. Therefore, it's very likely that they will also buy a drink to go with it when they are buying a movie ticket.

If you want to save some money, why don't you make popcorn yourself? First, put some butter in the pan and wait until it melts. Second, add some corn to the pan and fry it. Third, when the color of the corn turns dark, put the lid on and wait. Fourth, when you start hearing some popping sounds, pick up the pan and shake it a little. Last, wait for another five minutes, and then you can enjoy the popcorn!

Sounds easy, right? Now you can make some popcorn before going to the movies or sell it at your school fair!
